

Tim O'Shea lives and writes in New Hampshire. His work has appeared in newspapers, magazines and on radio. This is Tim's first book.

Newspaper columnist, radio commentator, and storyteller, Tim O'Shea combines a fierce wit with a keen eye for life in America today. Finding the humor in any situation, Tim exposes the horrors of Halloween, the challenges of space travel, and his struggle as a short man in a tall man's world.

O'Shea writes about a world we can all identify with, unless, of course, you've never been lucky enough to watch a pet die, pass a kidney stone, or dance in front of 500 classmates while dressed as a glam-rock mime. This is a hypermanic, hyperspeed look at the world around us, captured through the lens of family, fatherhood, and faith.
